Students reflect on a quote related to servant leadership:

"Keep away from people who try to belittle your ambitions. Small people always do that, but the really great make you feel that you, too, can become great". (Mark Twain)

Working together in groups of four/five, students discuss the quote and exchange ideas!

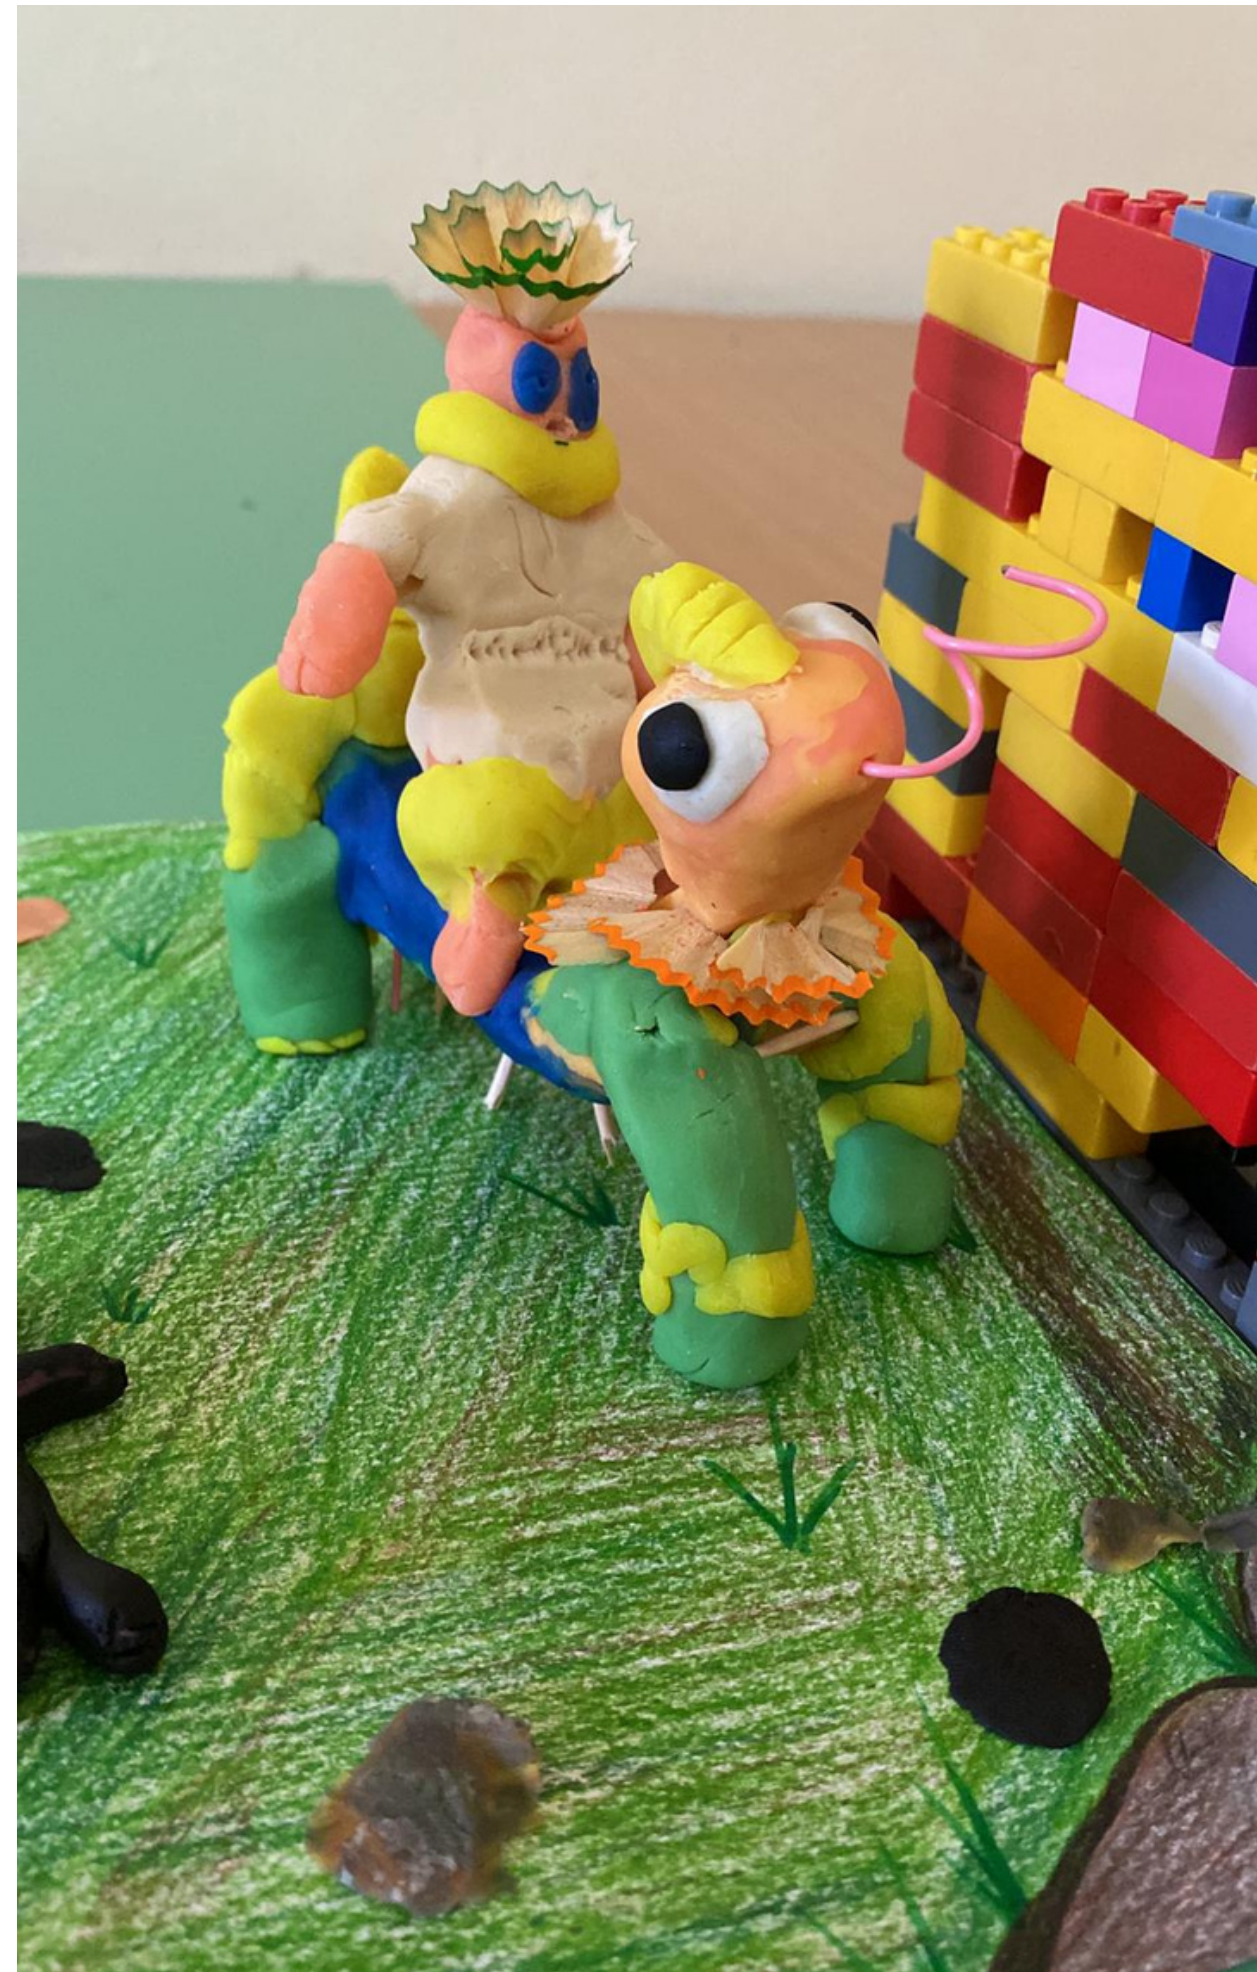

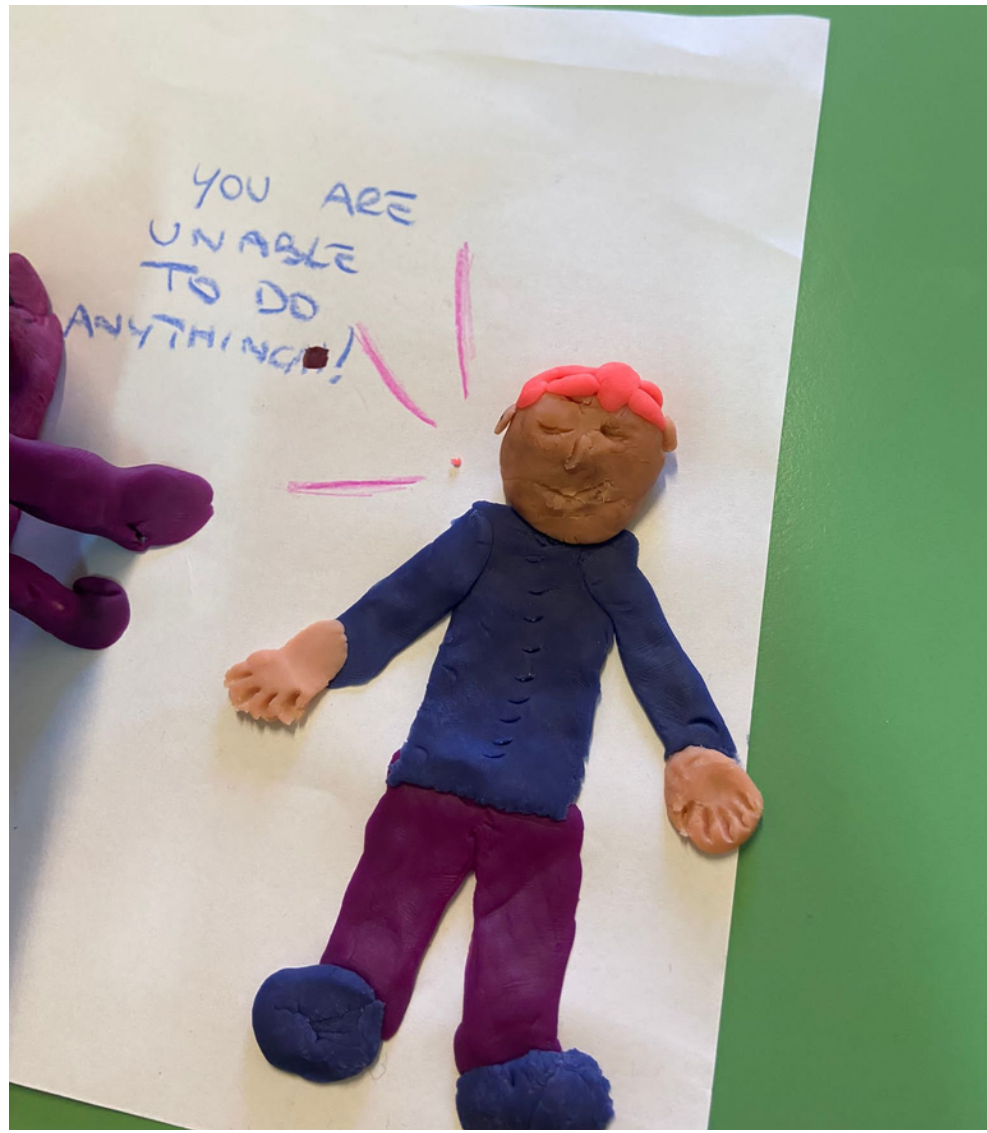

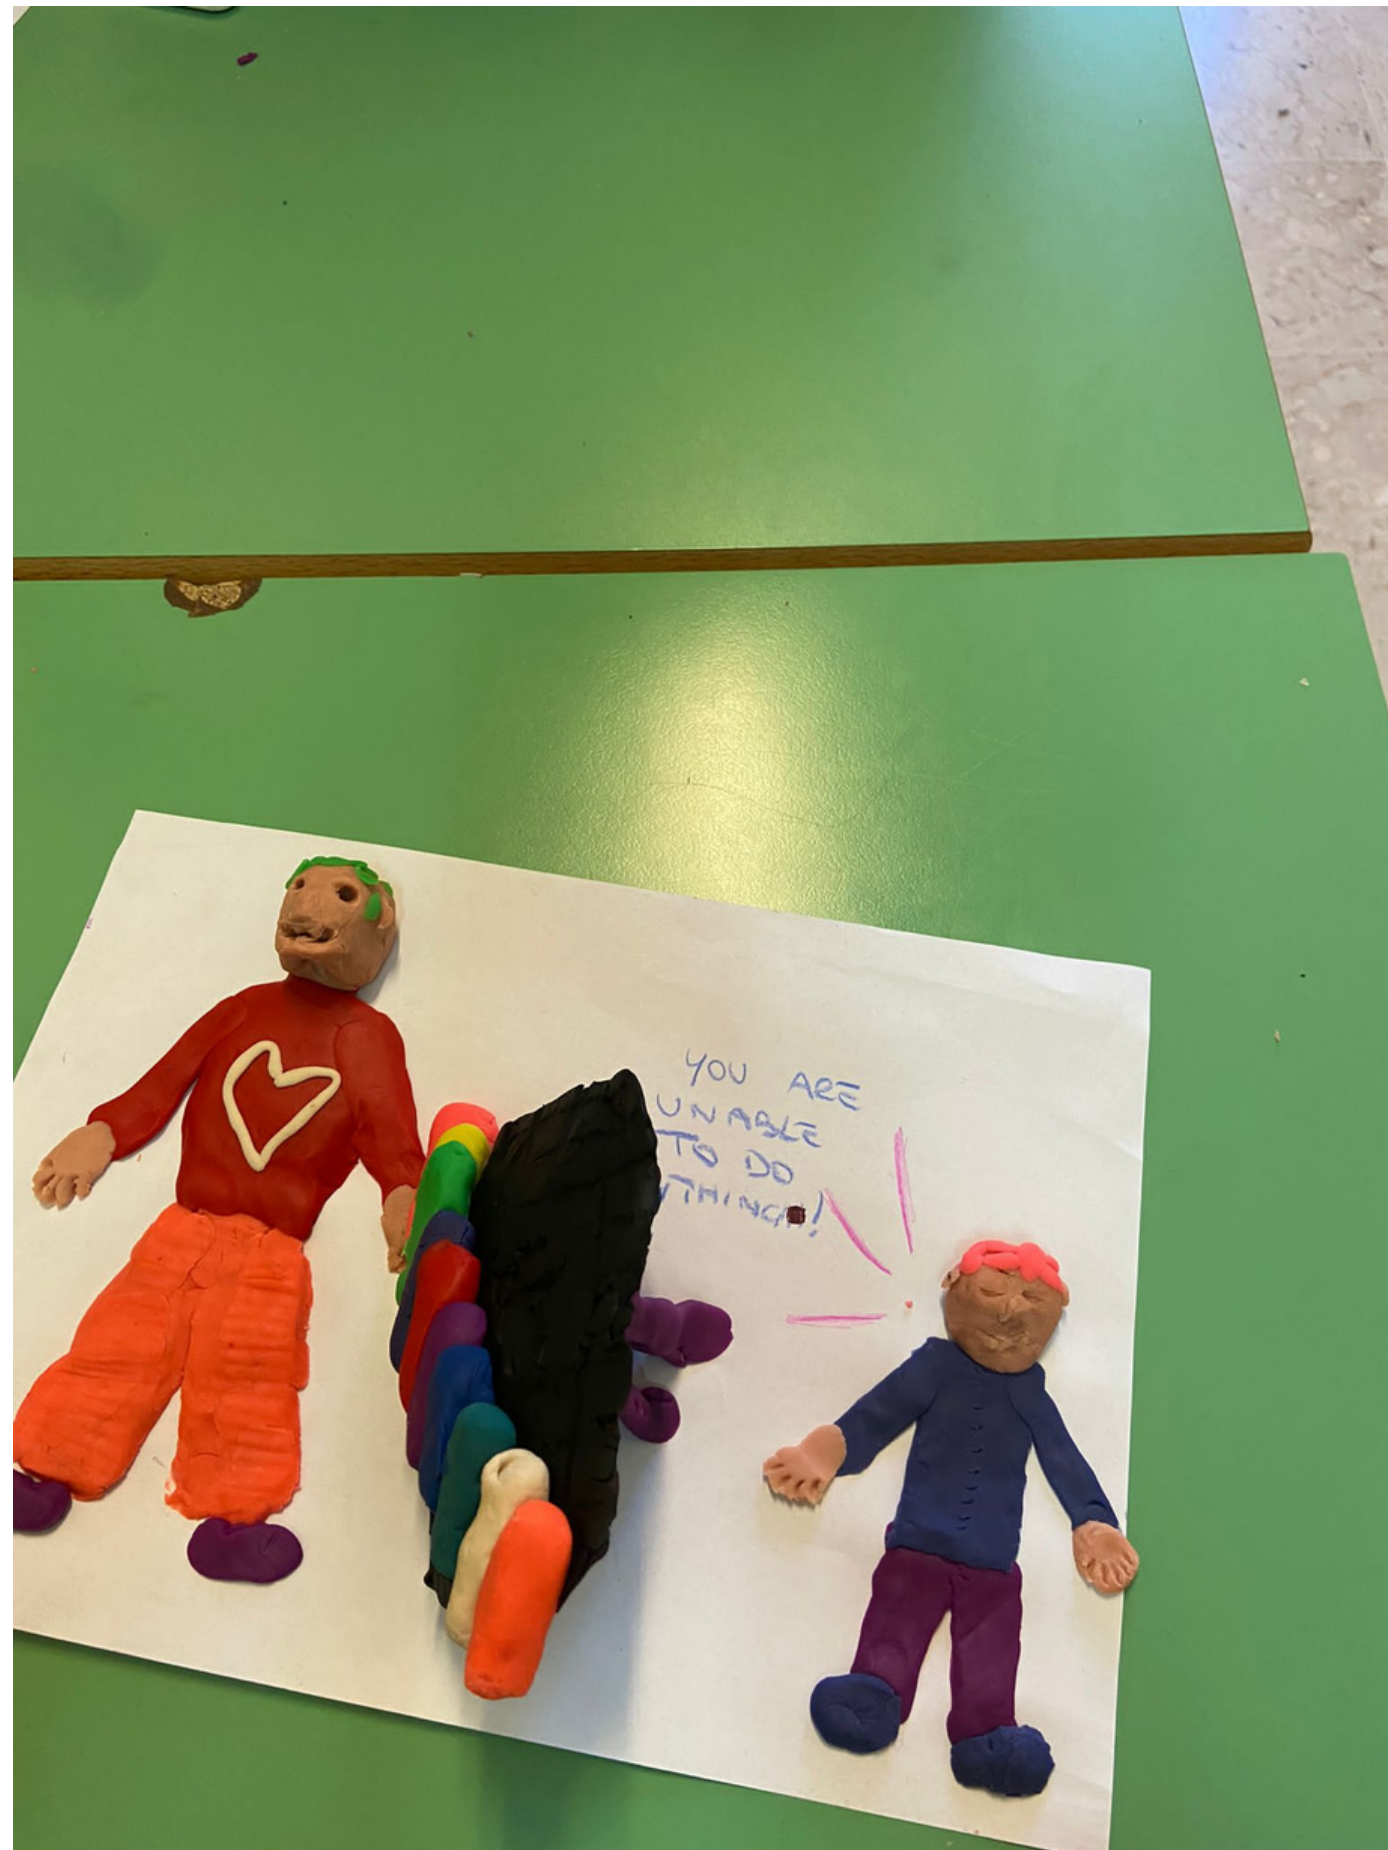

Each group makes a plastic representation of their understanding of the quote

And now students of each group present their work to the other groups!

This work represents two men: one is small, he is saying "you are unable to do anything".

He undervalues other people's abilities.

Next to him there is a wall representing his incapacity to go beyond his selfishness; he doesn't want to help the other people fulfill their potential and improve themselves.

The other man is a big man, he has a smile on his face and a big heart capable of welcoming people. Next to him there are some stairs representing the path he has followed to grow as a person, his capacity to value other people's qualities, to make them believe in themselves and encourage them.

He is a great leader who makes the other people feel that they, too, can become great!!!

LEGO-LOGOS

This work represents the difficulties of life with a wall.

The small people represent all those who want to hinder the dreams of the other people, while the big dragon represents the really great people who help you to overcome obstacles.

In this case the dragon offers its back to the boy to help him to overcome his difficulties (the wall).

This was an inspiring activity and also made me discover that my mates are creative and they too are great people to rely on.

Collecting student feedback

Debriefing

- Was your understanding of the quote clear before you started to work on your construction?
- Did your vision change while working on your construction?
- Did you change your interpretation of the quote after listening to your classmates?
- What do you think of this activity?

Thanks for your attention!
